Learn to buy your gemstone yourself – Be an Expert

Well now, since wearing of an astro gemstone is more related to faith & fear one always has the doubt about what he is wearing or buying.

Reading & understanding this page below will give you great base to understand how to buy an astro gemstone.

→ After consulting a right gem therapist or astrologer one would know what gemstone they are suppose to wear, the question that arises after that is from where to buy the gemstone, what is the quality, what is the price, what are the types & so on, before understanding how to understand the quality of gemstone one should know from where to buy?

→ People often take it for granted the jewelers are the right place to buy a gem or the astrologer himself will be the right guide, this is because of their background, however these are the worst places to buy a gemstone from because jewelers are good with ornaments & metals but not with stones, just because they have an ornament shop doesn't mean they are gemologists. Astrologers & so called guruji's you have to depend blindly on them because just incase they put a specific requirement you will be like from where do I find us from & instead you would request the astrologer or guruji to get it for you, some of them are honest to say that they do not sell them because they have less knowledge on the other hand some sell them so that they can get the cream of money besides their consultation charges & trust they are just like a normal layman not knowing much about gemstones. Rather you should know how to buy a gemstone on your own. We shall explain how easy it is to buy a gemstone in this section.

How to check the quality of gemstones

→ Incase there are any effects, then the effects of an transparent Astro Gemstone depends on its color, transparency & size. Deeper the color more rays it could attract from the planet & more the transparency easily it would pass in your body. → Most of the times one gets an original Astro Gemstone but the color is either too less or treated & transparency is very poor. Incase the color is less or treated its potential to attract rays reduces & at the same time more the color with no transparency does attract rays but doesn't pass it into your body. So one should ensure that the stone has a bit of all in it if not more.

All we could do is helping you understand how to know which stone is of a good quality.

→ Well there are a few categories of stones like the

1. The non treated ones (precious) – No treatments have been performed on the stone, its color & internal structure is all natural
2. The treated ones (precious) – the stones are original & natural but certain characteristics are enhanced by processes & treatments, like its color may been improved.
3. Substitutes (semi precious) – they are again naturally produced by nature but are substitutes to the precious stones & a cheaper option.
4. Synthetics & fakes – made in laboratories.

Now for eg if you have to buy a yellow sapphire, you should ask the merchant whether the ones he is showing you are treated ones or non treated, if you have willingness to spend for a good stone then you should always emphasize on showing you non treated stones.

If there is a slight budget constrain then a treated stone would do but it should be to your knowledge rather than wearing a substitute or synthetic.

The color is pretty much visible to your naked eye; the transparency could be seen by holding the stone against any form of light.

Taking a next step, the basic rule for a gemstone is

Deeper & better the color, more the transparency & more the size higher is the price. So once you out to buy a gem see how deep, dark & nice the color is along with its transparency, however it will cost you a very high price. The ones with good color but no transparency fetches a lower price.
